My dear George:

Several days ago I sent you a message and expected to have a line or two from you ere now; to date none has reached me and it occurred to me that you may have left town to work or something of that sort. Even so I figure that you may be back for Saturday hence this note. There is nothing new or startling at this end since you were over to see me in person, but I have had a letter from President Morrin in which he said that he expected to be out here about the twentieth of this month and would be over to see me. Would like to have a talk with you before that time if you could get to it and as I see it the only time left to you is Saturday the seventeenth instant. If you can get to it well and good; if not I presume everything will come out all right in the end. Usual regards. We are fine and dandy and trust that you can say the same. IN haste.
