Mr. P. J. Morrin
Indianapolis, Indiana.

Dear sir and brother:

No doubt you consider the address on the accompanying envelope rather lengthy, but after examining the contents I am of the opinion that you will decide that it is called for. Am enclosing you two letters and two envelopes that I sent you some weeks ago and which were recently returned to me from the dead letter office. Do you have much trouble of this sort? You will recall that I wrote you that I was having some trouble with my mail, that I had kept no copies or record of it, but that from then on I intended to do both so that the matter could be gone into at some later time in case letters were not delivered or at least returned to me. I had in mind getting you to take the matter up some time you were over at Washington, D. C., but ~~ix~~ if the enclosures are any sample of the way that particular department of the Government is doing business, we will have to try something else and I for one am ready to believe about everything I have heard as to the complete demoralization of the Post Office Department. Wrote you a few lines on May 27; your last letter to me was dated May 18; have not had a visit from Brother Scahill as yet. Note in one of your recent reports that you had a meeting in New York, at which some of our Boston people were present. I have a little matter there that I would like to get cleared up but I do not seem to have very much success with correspondence from there. Will you write some of our ~~xx~~ people there and ask them to co-operate with me. This item will not allow of very much delay if any results are to be obtained. Trust that you are well, I know that you are busy. All O. K. here.
Fraternally and sincerely,
